FORWORD.

The following bibliography, which I have prepared for the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice, is issued in the hope that it may assist the ministers and laymen of our body in the general study of those questions of social reform, which constitute the supreme problem of our generation. The list of books is as accurate as careful research and competent advice can make it; but it is not in any sense exhaustive. It is simply a selection of some of the best books of that great mass of literature, which has been pouring from the press in an ever increasing flood during the last five or six years. Included in the compilation are certain older publications, such as Spencer's "Principles of Sociology," Carlyle's "Past and Present," Ruskin's "Unto This Last," etc., which have been mentioned because of their permanent significance and abiding power. Under the heading of "The Church and the Social Question," have been included a few short articles of interest, which have appeared in current journals. There has also been added a partial list of magazines, which are attempting to grapple more or less intelligently with the social problem. The classification of books under the various headings is of course of the roughest character, but may prove in some measure helpful. In many of the books named, as, for instance, C. D. Wright's "Practical Sociology," Benjamin Trueblood's "Federation of the World," etc., are extensive bibliographies or copious references to important books. I have made no attempt to reproduce these bibliographies or references in this pamphlet, believing it to be sufficient for my purpose to name herein the books containing them. I would venture to call especial attention to "The New Encyclopedia of Social Reform," which is a publication of the first importance.

My thanks are due to Mr. Louis F. Post, Mr. Owen R. Lovejoy, Mr. John Graham Brooks, Mr. John Spargo and Dr. Benjamin Trueblood, for assistance in compiling this bibliography; and to Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Prof. N. P. Gilman and Rev. W. W. Peck, for various corrections and suggestions.
